often frustrated with written expression and begin to dislike the writing process. Student can trace letter, “draw” letters in paint or shaving cream, use tweezers to move small objects and complete connect-the-dot pictures to build handwriting skills.

b) Identification

Identifying aspects of the written word is an essential skill for emergent writers. When teaching writing at any level, identification strategies are used to improve writing. Beginning writers should be able to identify uppercase and lowercase letters and sounds associated with letters. As writing skills become more fluent, students should be taught to identify complete sentences, sentence fragments and run-ons. Students should also be able to identify topic sentences and supporting details. These identification strategies are skill that create strong writers. Help student master identification skills through use of graphic organizers, peer editing and exposure to good writing samples.

c) Mechanics

Grammar, spelling, punctuation, or organization are important aspects of writing. Often, it is assumed that writers possess these basic skills, and therefore, both student and teachers are frustrated when they are not evident.

Proper use of grammar and sentence structures makes student's writing more meaning of writing, and organization of words and ideas is also impreative to getting a point across. Grammar and spelling can be taught through repetition and drill. Direct instruction in grammar is necessary for student to master this writing skill. Help student build confidence in their writing skills by helping them edit mechanical mistakes in their writing, or by allowing them to dictate ideas to you.

d) Content

The most important aspect of writing, for many people is the content. Getting student to communicate ideas is a skill that must be encouraged and cultivated. Sentence starters, journals and free-writers are good ways to build writing fluency and to encourage student to practice writing down thoughts. Continue building this skill by teaching student the value of drafts in writing. Prewritten, or brainstorm for ideas, the write a rough draft. Edit and revise a rough draft until you are pleased with the final product. The drafting process is a valueable skill for all writers and will give student a final product they can be proud of.

2. The Genre in Writing

English writing have divided into some of parts, for example : descriptive text, procedure text, narrative text, recount text, and report text.

a) Descriptive text is we write to discribe a particular person, place or thing

- c) Narrative text is we write to amuse, entertain, and to deal with actual or vicarious experience in different ways.
- d) Recount text is we write to retell events for the purpose of informing or entertaining.
- e) Report text is we write to describe the ways things are with reference to a range of natural, man-made and social phenomena in our environment.

3. The Nature of Writing

Learning writing means learn to organize the experience, information and ideas particularly different language pattern. To produce a good text of writing needs hard practice and process.

Writing is not only how to make sentences in paragraph, but also how to express the ideas in consecutive way through the appropriate graphic symbol and structure. David Nunas suggests ; Writing is an extremely complex continue activity in which the writer required to demonstrate control

4. The Writing Process

a. Self questioning - Asking themselves questions about their writing to establish audience and purpose in their own minds, for example:

- Why am I writing this text?
- Who am I writing for?
- What kind of language do I need to use?
- What do I need to tell them?
- How will I organize my work?

b. Planning content - Thinking about plot, theme, information content, etc., to suit the task through:

- brainstorming ideas, alone or with others
- researching the topic in books or on-screen, and making notes
- using other resources to stimulate and/or inform.

c. Sounding out - Rehearsing what is to be written orally prior to writing in

D. The Classroom Action Research

1. The Definition of Classroom Action Research

Action Research is a process in which educators examine their own practice systematically and carefully using the techniques of qualitative research. Participants design an inquiry question, collect data throughout the year, analyze what they have learned, and write about their findings. Observations, interviews, surveys and journals are typical data methods that participants use to investigate their questions.

Action research has different meaning and thing when used by different another. For example, Hopkin treats action research and classroom research by teachers as synonymous.⁷ Brown and Robinson suggest that any action undertaken by teachers to collect data and evaluate their own teaching was for teachers to adopt the methods they had been teaching their children, and learn to solve their own problems co-operatively”.⁹

Put simply, action research is “learning by doing “it is conducted by the teacher as classroom participant. As teacher, he/she needs to know what is actually happening in classroom, collecting data and evaluating her/his own teaching, do something to solve it, see how successful his/her effort were, and if not satisfied, try again until showing the increasing of changing.

Nunan sees the important defining aspect of action research as the controlling role of the teacher: “For me the salient distinction between AR and other form of research process is initiated and carried out by practitioner.”¹⁰

2. The Steps of Classroom Action Research

Stephen Kemmis has developed a simple model of cyclical of the typical action research process each cycle has four steps; they are, planning,

c) Observing are we observing the result of the acting is it satisfied or not?

d) Reflecting is we analyze the weaknesses of the students.

Strickland outlines the following steps in an AR cycle :

1. identify an issue, interest or problem
2. seek knowledge
3. plan an action
4. implement the action
5. reflect on your observations
6. revise the plan

Based on the steps of Action Research above, it can be concluded that teacher as researcher has to prepare teaching process as good as possible.

Every step has to be followed in continuous and integrated.

There are cycles within cycles. Some extend across an entire study. Others occupy only minutes or less. The result can be a very flexible and
